

FIRST DAY OF ISSUE

THOMAS C. WOLFE - began work on his novel, Look Homeward Angel, in 1926. He completed the manuscript in 1928 and it was published on Oct. 8, 1929. Of all Wolfe's long works this one was closest to his original plan. It sold only moderately well, but was a great critical success, and Wolfe was hailed as a most promising young American novelist.

"I will forget everything and do everything, I will make all the people I love, I will think all the thoughts I like, the emotions I can feel, and I will work, work, work."

"His first drafts were always done in longhand with a pencil, and while he had a secretary... one of her jobs was to bring a dozen pencils sharpened and ready."
— Edward Aswell, editor and friend of Thomas Wolfe

*Thomas Wolfe (1896-1938) gave the world proof of his writing genius with the publication of his first novel, Look Homeward, Angel in 1925. Strangely autobiographical, it chronicles the upbringing of a famous Great and the upbringing of a famous home.*

Thomas Wolfe (1896-1938), born in Asheville, North Carolina, studied at the University of North Carolina and North Carolina State. The Web and the Rock, published in 1935, was the first of four autobiographical novels written by Wolfe. It follows the youthful George Wolfe from his southern upbringing to his college days in this time in New York City.

Thomas Wolfe (1896-1938) published the second work in his autobiographical cycle, Of Time and the River, in 1933. It was the second (and Thomas's final) and continues the saga of Eugene Wolf in his quest for fulfillment in the world of Harvard, New York City and New Europe, some distance from his youth in small-town North Carolina.

Thomas Wolfe (1896-1938) often missed England, in which he did his undergraduate pre-med work. The Cambridge, England, portrait is by John W. Lavery. Wolfe began to write with Look Homeward, Angel in 1917. One of the most noted in the search for a "literature proper" for publishing in America. Despite the controversy he had in the United States, he became a major, prolific force in the American literary scene and the generation of those who followed.
